The World Bog Snorkelling Championships in Wales is being menaced by shambling hordes of the undead. Fortunately for bog sport enthusiasts, Alice, the former telephone psychic, and Welly, the mostly indestructible man, head up Odyssey International's Enforcement branch, dedicated to stomping out the supernatural wherever it rears its sparkly head. But Alice and Welly might not even make it to Wales thanks to a fervent zombie rights activist stowing his zombie best friend in their plane's luggage compartment. Now the zombie plague is spreading at 25,000 feet, complicated by the moral dilemma that zombies just might be people too! Decaying, infectious, bitey people...

The independent corporate freehold of Pitouie is a fleck of rock in the South Pacific. It has no industry, no economy and no natural resources. What it does have is a volcano, a glossy brochure and a list of industrial waste producers, whose executives are about to descend on the island's pristine shores to bid for a hole in the ground.

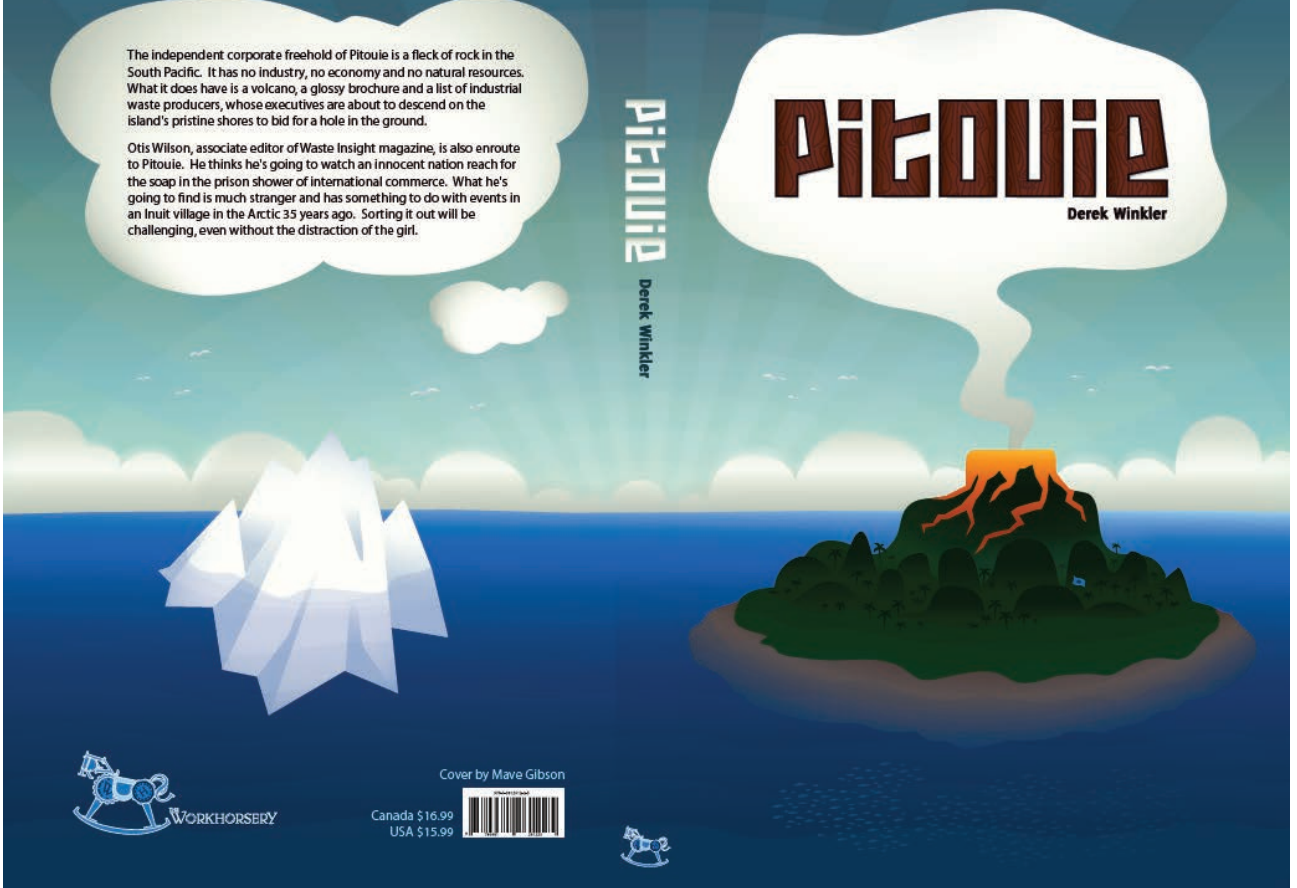

Otis Wilson, associate editor of Waste Insight magazine, is also enroute to Pitouie. He thinks he's going to watch an innocent nation reach for the soap in the prison shower of international commerce. What he's going to find is much stranger and has something to do with events in an Inuit village in the Arctic 35 years ago. Sorting it out will be challenging, even without the distraction of the girl.

Kadiri has long been a force on the local scene, but the last several months have seen her profile grow nationally with coverage on Much Music, CBC AM, Toronto's Exclaim Magazine and the Georgia Straight. Whether it's opening for K-os at the Commodore in front of 1000 people as part of this year's Vancouver International Jazz Festival or performing solo and unplugged at New Music West's Songwriters Showcase back in May, Kia always brings the house down with her powerful stage presence and visceral approach to her music. Backed by her whip smart 5 piece band, she is a force to be reckoned with and with a recent spate of gigs under their belt, the combo has been grooving hard - pushing Kadiri's razor sharp rhyming skills to a new level and creating a live experience that is unmatched on the local scene.
